Regarding claim 5, the prior art of record fails to show a method for forming an integrated seat assembly comprising routing a single cable having a plurality of conductors into the seat, using a selected first one of the conductors to directly supply power to at least one of the independent electronic components, and a second one of the conductors to interface with one of the independent electronic components; and interfacing the cable with a distribution subsystem supported from the seat; and using the distribution subsystem to supply signals to at least one of the independent electronic components and power to at least one of the independent electronic components, in combination with other specifically claimed features.

Regarding claim 12, the prior art of record fails to show a method for controlling electronic components locate on a seat on a mobile platform comprising routing a cable having a plurality of conductors along a leg portion of the seat; and interfacing the distribution subsystem with a plurality of independent electronic components to provide power to at least one of the electronic components and communication capability to at least one of the electronic components, in combination with other specifically claimed features.
